Gold

Adventurers offer treasurer bundles now these are a simplified unit that represents a share of the adventure's rewards. These are multiplied by the PC's level no matter the adventurer's tier or sub tier used. Levels are going down, bundle across.

Downtime

The character gets a number of downtime days as noted above according to what type of adventure they completed. These must be used or lost at the time, but do not need to be all on the same action. The only restriction is that if you are doing multiple actions, crafting/retraining is done before earned income.

Crafting: (pg 244-245 and 503-504 Core) Some characters may choose to spend their time Crafting a piece of equipment. Use the DC based on the level of the item from Table 10–5 for common items, applying the adjustment from Table 10–6 for uncommon or rare. You can Craft uncommon or rare items only if you find their formulas. Crafting requires that you spend the first 4 days of a block of Downtime preparing before attempting your check to Craft; unlike Earning Income, Crafting tasks can be continued across as many Downtime days as necessary until the item is completed or you pay the remainder of the Price required to finish the item.

Retraining: (pg 481 Core) You can also use Downtime to retrain certain abilities and swap them out for new ones. This works as described in the Core Rulebook. Retraining a feat, skill increase, or a spell in your spell repertoire takes 7 days of Downtime, while retraining a selectable class feature, such as a druid order, takes 28 days. If you level up when still in the process of retraining a selectable class feature such as a druid order, you may choose an option that would be legal for the new order you are retraining to, though you may not use that ability until the retraining is complete.

Retraining as a Pathfinder – You can retrain your selection between Spells, Scrolls, Swords, or field-commissioned agent. Doing so takes 14 days of Downtime, during which you adjust your level of affiliation with these aspects of society.
